3 Largest Program Services FY15, 7/1/14 . 6/30/15

Mission Statement: The American Institute for Contemporary German Studies strengthens the German-American relationship in an evolving Europe and changing world. The Institute produces objective and original analyses of developments and trends in Germany, Europe and the United States; creates new transatlantic networks; and facilitates dialogue among the business, political, and academic communities to manage differences and define and promote common interests.

Affiliated with The Johns Hopkins University, AICGS provides a comprehensive program of public forums, policy studies, research and study groups designed to enrich the political, corporate and scholarly constituencies it serves.

1) ERP: The German & American Relationship in Change	$298,046

Exempt Purpose Achievement.

This project aims at examining the future of U.S. and German relations in a changing world and providing the foundations for using this relationship as key to solving current and future challenges. By analyzing the question of political and societal leadership, the transformation of international organizations, and the role of a new generation in transatlantic relations, AICGS provides both countries with opportunities to strengthen their relationship today and in the future.

Project Topics

Political and Societal Leadership

A female Chancellor in Germany and an African-American President in the U.S.: Political leadership has changed significantly since the times of Chancellor Adenauer and President Truman. Additionally, transatlantic relations are not only informed by the politicians governing a country; societal actors and organizations play an increasing role in shaping decisions all around the world. Leadership within and of a country is also continually in flux: Elections provide different domestic leadership. The waxing and waning of international power allows countries to assume different powers throughout history. While many analysts point to Europe and U.S. as declining and the nations in Asia as rising powers, the values that bind transatlantic leadership and societies have made transatlantic relations unique. AICGS aims at providing an analysis of political and societal leadership styles of Germany and the U.S. as a nation as well as its actors and societies.

International Organizations in Flux

As international relations change, so should the international organizations designed to provide a framework. Developing countries and rising economies such as China and India have long clamored for a larger seat at the table of the UN, WTO, etc. The U.S. and the EU have debated on and off increasing transatlantic economic ties in a more formal way (for example through a transatlantic free trade zone). Yet, institutions such as the European Union, which long have been heralded as the role-model for other countries and continents struggle to straddle supranational and intergovernmental aspects in a meaningful and effective way. The role Germany and the U.S. will and should play in international organizations is changing and this project would not only analyze these changes but address strategies how transatlantic relations could be used to cope with them in a beneficial way.

The New Transatlantic Generation

Transatlantic, and specifically U.S.-German relations, were coined by the many interpersonal relations forged after World War Two. In times of U.S. troops being withdrawn from Europe and American focus on Asia, the transatlantic relationship is changing and with it the younger generation sustaining it. By bringing experts and especially younger scholars and policymakers together, AICGS's mission has always been to bridge analysis with networks. This topic will continue to provide the younger generations in U.S. and German state parliaments with opportunities to network and discuss current topics.

2) DAAD/AICGS Fellowship Program

$166,459

Exempt Purpose Achievement. The partnership between the Deutscher Akademischer Austausch Dienst (DAAD) and the American Institute for Contemporary German Studies (AICGS) has helped to sustain and expand German-American scholarly networks at a time of critical change in German-American and transatlantic relations. We believe that such exchanges are essential to develop a successor generation of scholars in Germany and the United States that understand our commonalities as well as differences.

AICGS recruits DAAD fellows for a two-month research stay at the Institute from two broad pools of scholars:

- Researchers who are working on key issues of central importance to the German-American relationship and related to one of the Institute's three broad programming areas: Foreign & Domestic Policy; Business & Economics; and Society, Culture & Politics. In addition to balancing between these three program areas, the Institute will seek to target applicants who focus on the most policy-relevant issues at the time.
- Researchers who are not directly members of the German-American or transatlantic scholarly communities but whose research complements the work of ongoing projects and study groups sponsored by the Institute, and who might benefit from involvement in these project activities.

3) Business and Economics Program $121,258

Exempt Purpose Achievement. AICGS generates insights into the institutional, political, cultural, and historical factors that shape our responses to deepening economic integration and the challenges of globalization. Current issues in the Business & Economics Program include the Debt Crisis, responding to the end of the years of plenty by comparing German and American responses to the crisis. It looks at macroeconomic discrepancies and their potential threat to national security, studies approaches to international macroeconomic policymaking in the face of the crisis, and analyzes transatlantic trade and growth. In the area of Corporate Regulations it examines corporate governance and the mechanisms of regulations.

The global economy has still not managed to overcome effects of the financial crisis. Despite improvements in the American and European financial markets, the fiscal crisis in Europe and the continually rising U.S. deficit have caused a decline of trust in the capital markets and have overshadowed any growth in the real economy. Overcoming the recession and returning to a sustainable growth pattern, however, is of paramount importance for the wealth and security of all nations and has an impact on almost all other policy areas. The Business and Economics Program is analyzing past and current American and German economic policy decisions and their impact on transatlantic, European, and global cooperation.
